“LOOKING UP AND OUTWARD”

He said it would never happen. He said that everyone else might run to save themselves but not him. He said he was willing to die if necessary. But in the moment of trial, Peter struggled. It was much easier to talk about courage than to be courageous. It was much easier to study loyalty than to be loyal. It was much easier to tell a story about love than to love. Peter fell. In Jesus’ deepest moments of despair, the once self-assured Peter crumbled. But Jesus didn’t give up on Peter. At the post-resurrection breakfast, Jesus gave Peter three chances to express his renewed love for the Lord. Three chances to undo the three denials. This story of Peter’s failure and God’s willingness to forgive should not make us view sin lightly, but neither should it make us be uncertain about God’s longing to forgive. I don’t know about you, but I love this story about Peter, because it reassures me that we have a Savior who is willing to give us another opportunity to start over, again! Think about it!

I love you all. Jack Cummings
